A mass of credulity—850 Vermont school teachers at Rutland.

Nothing but a typhoon could ever catch our feet if it wanted to run away.

American women who want the ballot will not be called molluscoids just because they refuse to follow the smashing tactics of their English cousins.

A short time ago Governor Haskell of Oklahoma made a general appeal for money; now he has specifically asked William Randolph Hearst for $600,000. Must be the first appeal was not heeded.

Whenever there is violence anywhere, some ship of a newspaper writer springs. "It is reported that anarchists from Barre Vt., and Paterson, N. J., are responsible for the trouble. For him it's the never-failing excuse.

The proposal in the general assembly to require lobbyists to register their names and the objects for which they are working, also to make a statement of their expenditures, seems to be a harmless one. If it will protect our legislators from harm, it ought to be made a law.—Rutland News.

The "card index" of lobbyists would help out wonderfully. You see a man stroking a legislator's collar and bestowing one of those benign smiles; you learn his name and then you look up his pedigree in the "card index." Voilà! It is all off with the stroking of the collar and the bestowing of the benign smile. The next thing shall we place a bright, red tag on the lobbyist's lapel, same as you would label small pox or diphtheria?

The Montpelier Journal presents Zed S. Stanton of Roxbury-Montpelier in the following handsome words of commendation for a judicial position:

"What's the matter with Hon. Zed S. Stanton for a superior judge on the county bench? He is a lawyer of ability, a man well versed in the history of the state, political and legal, a man of judicial temperament, even poised, clear working brain, absolutely square, tied up to no one, and one who has stood the right test to which the people of Vermont, where everybody knows everybody else, put a man through a long period of time. To-day Mr. Stanton is better liked and more respected for his ability than he was five or ten, or even one year ago when he commenced his campaign for the governorship."

A COMMENDABLE MOVE.

We are glad to note that the Vermont legislature has erred a determination to make this biennial session less a picnic and more a business. Early adjournments and late returns from recess do not constitute features of a business policy which anyone of them would pursue provided he was engaged in a private venture. This slipping home habit, which begins Wednesday night each week and ends Friday night, and this straggling back habit which brings the full quota of the assembly only by Wednesday morning each week, are not right and are not doing justice to the state of Vermont or to the immediate constituency which elected the men. Neither do they reflect credit on the good intentions of the men themselves who indulge in the practice. If they are to have roll-calls on Tuesday morning and Friday afternoon to determine who is present and who is absent, it would be well for the newspapers to occasionally publish the absentees' names and let the absentees explain to their constituents.

AUTOMOBILE LAW GOOD ENOUGH FOR THE PRESENT.

The Automobile Club of Vermont has taken a stand in favor of the present law regarding the use of the motor car. Interpreted strictly, this probably does not mean that the automobilists are completely satisfied with all the sections of the document which was revised thoroughly two years ago, but it means that the members of the club are willing to sacrifice something to maintain cordial relations with a public which has not yet been completely won over to the machine, or, rather, to a tolerance of it. There are several changes which the A. C. V. would like to make to the present requirements, but it holds its wishes in abeyance. The general public should recognize this action and at least meet the autoists half-way. To do this there should be at least no revision of the law with the intent to hedge about the autoists any more than at present. It now contains fairly liberal provisions for the use of the motor car—liberal considering the physical conditions that obtain in Vermont. There are no wide boulevards in the state, and there are many narrow, hill roads, so that the limitations in the use of the motor car are greater here than in many other states which might be mentioned.

The Vermont autoists recognize these limitations as a rule, and what few complaints that we have heard of during the past summer usually pertained to out-of-state tourists rather than to our own people. But wherever there are vio-tions of the law and of the rules of decency, the A. C. V. undoubtedly stands ready to give its moral support to proper punishment. Individual motorists have been heard to say that enforcement of the present statute would serve to put Vermont people of all kinds in a better frame of mind than more legislation. It there is a violation, let us enforce the law and test this sentiment. Meanwhile, let's keep the present law intact.

CURRENT COMMENT.

The Rich in Court.

To say that the defendant corporation or the wealthy defendant individual is at a disadvantage in court proceedings brought by a poor complainant would be to make a paradoxical statement, yet it is conceivable that a jury, unconsciously perhaps, be influenced to some slight extent by sympathy for the supposedly weaker litigant. That this was not the case in the trial of the $100,000 suit brought by John H. Freit, a stable boy, against August Belmont is quite apparent. Freit, who was formerly employed by Belmont, alleged that he had been injured to the extent mentioned, by the publication, at the instance of the defendant, of a notice in the Racing Calendar, warning race-horse owners against employing Freit, on the ground that the boy was still under agreement to Belmont. The trial of the action, which was held before a New York supreme court justice and a jury lasted three days, and the jury required an hour in which to decide in favor of the defendant.

The boy, it appears, alleged that he had been discharged from the Belmont employ, whereas the defense aimed to show that this was not the fact. The decision of the jury seems to indicate at least, that the Belmont side of the case was the more convincingly presented, and that the twelve men in the box had no disposition to go back of the evidence and the arguments. Cynically-inclined persons may urge the possibility of monetary influence, not necessarily in this case more than in others, but the probable fact is that jury-bribing is far less common than some people seem to suppose, and that the average jury is governed by its honest interpretation of the case as presented in court.—Manchester Union.

Legislation for the Farmer.

As usual, the farmers comprise more than half the House of Representatives, with 128 members out of 245. If they should get together in a compact, one-motived body, they would probably be able to control the whole process of law-making during the present session. The farmer as an issue, however, is fast becoming merged in the others trades and avocations.

Legislation for the benefit of one particular class never received much of a following, and is less in favor today than it ever was before. What benefits the farmer generally benefits the whole state and what benefits the state as a whole must naturally help the farmer with the others.

As a matter of record, the farmer is now in a minority in Vermont, according to percentages quoted by the St. Albans Messenger. It is now alleged that farmers are only 37 per cent. of the population of Vermont, 63 per cent. being associated with other callings. The farmers of the state furnish us with much of the bone and sinew of our industrial life and most of the states leaders began life on the farm, but we must now consider this most important industry alongside half dozen others, all growing, all entitled to full recognition and place in our scheme of commerce.

The Farmers' club, which is about to be formed at the State House, will prove to be of great social and communal value. Its members will not and probably could not agree on any program of legislation that included measures not equally of benefit to all.

Class legislation is the thing, above all others, that has helped to keep Vermont just a little behind her proper place in the procession of progress. "One for all and all for one" is a romantic slogan, but it is nearer the theory of true state and community progress than most people give it credit for.—Rutland Herald.

DUTIES OF LIQUOR CHAPMAN.

He Is to Be Instructor of Organized Militia of Vermont.

The following general order has been issued from the office of the adjutant-general:

"First Lieutenant Leslie A. I. Chapman, 5th Cavalry, United States Army, having been assigned to duty with the Vermont National Guard by the war department at the request of the governor, and having reported for such duty in compliance with his instructions, is designated as an additional member of the governor's staff. The special instructions of the war department outlining Lieutenant Chapman's duties are as follows:

"Having reported to the governor, in pursuance of the duty enjoined, you will hereafter comply with requests of the executive, so far as possible. As confidential advisor of the governor, and also of the secretary of war, your duty is to work for the efficiency of the militia and for harmonious co-operation between it and the regular army. Your observations should embrace everything pertaining to the military aspect of the militia and you should impart instruction in regard to all professional matters whenever requested. As instructor of the organized militia of the state of Vermont, it is your duty to give both theoretical and practical instruction to the state forces as far as possible, and for this purpose you should visit the various commands of the state whenever the governor desires such visits to be made."

"The special orders of the governor to Lieutenant Chapman will be communicated to him as occasion demands."

MONTPELIER HIGH LOST.

Had Three Touchdowns Scored on Her The Burlington High.

Burlington, Oct. 17.—Burlington high school scored three touchdowns on Montpelier high school on the gridiron yesterday afternoon, while the visitors failed to score because of fumbles. The score was 18 to 0. The home team scored once in the first half, Frank crossing the line after Burlington had ploughed down from the middle of the field. In the second half a trick play netted a big gain and then Pike carried the ball over the line. Bullock made the third touchdown. All the goals were kicked. The line-up.

OLD RUINS FOUND.

Supposed to Have Been Soldiers' Barracks in Burlington.

Burlington, Oct. 17.—During the digging of the cellar for the construction of William Cayce's house on Park avenue yesterday, several skeletons of horses and the foundation of a former building were unearthed. It is supposed that the ruins are those of buildings used by the soldiers in the War of 1812. The condition of the skeletons would tend to show them to be fully as old as that, as they were in a crumbling condition.

WILLIAMSTOWN

Williamstown Grange Closed Very Successful Fair.

Williamstown grange closed a very successful two-day fair Thursday evening. The grange has spared no time or trouble to make this fair the great success which it has been. Every department was well filled. In most departments there was also a good line of articles which were donated to be sold, bringing in a quite a sum. The exhibits were all fine and many were the words of praise given. Some were heard to say the exhibits were even better than at the state fair last season. Certainly it would be hard to find better. Supper was served both evenings to large crowds and the hall was filled to listen to the entertainments. Some of the goods were auctioned off both nights, bringing good prices and creating lots of fun. The grange will clear some over $200, which will be a help in the building of the hall.

Only a few went on the excursion to Boston yesterday.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Drouen of Adamant are visiting at H. S. Drury's.

Judge Stowe, accompanied by his wife, was here on business yesterday.
